2. Pomorie was not damaged during World War II. There are no monuments in the town, but two cemeteries containing Russian soldiers who fell during the last war are now called Russian memorials. These cemeteries, as well as the city park, are located on the main road.
3. The population of Pomorie is 6,000.¹ More than half of the population is Greek in origin; the remainder is Bulgarian or gypsy. Before the town burned, its population was entirely Greek, and it wasn't until after 1904 that other elements arrived there.
